Vertebrate Physiologist, Assistant Professor

The Department of Biology at Appalachian State University invites applications for a tenure-track position in vertebrate physiology at the rank of Assistant Professor to begin in August 2022. We seek a vertebrate physiologist with research expertise in endocrinology, metabolism, or a related field, and working on questions at the molecular, cellular, or organ system level using laboratory-based approaches. Applications from candidates who use a comparative or integrative approach are also welcomed. Teaching responsibilities will include our upper-division Human Systems Physiology course, participation in the introductory biology sequence for majors, and an advanced course in the candidate’s area of expertise.

Essential Duties and Responsibilities: This position is a full-time, 9-month, tenure-track position. The candidate must be committed to excellence in research, teaching, and service at a comprehensive university. A Ph.D. and postdoctoral experience are required. The successful candidate is expected to develop a research program that is competitive for external funding and involves undergraduate and master's students. The physical demands of this position are typical for a professional position at the university.

Appalachian State University, in North Carolina's Blue Ridge Mountains, prepares students to lead purposeful lives as global citizens who understand and engage their responsibilities in creating a sustainable future for all. The transformational Appalachian experience promotes a spirit of inclusion that brings people together in inspiring ways to acquire and create knowledge, to grow holistically, to act with passion and determination, and embrace diversity and difference. As one of 17 campuses in the University of North Carolina system, Appalachian enrolls about 20,000 students, has a low student-to-faculty ratio and offers more than 150 undergraduate and graduate majors. Suggested Salary Range Salary is competitive and commensurate with qualifications and experience.

Application materials are due by March 25, 2022.

For a complete application, please apply and submit all below-required documents electronically through Appalachian State University's Job Board:

1. Cover Letter / Letter of Interest
2. Curriculum Vitae
